FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

New Moves at Ewing Irrigation

Four new sales reps will give landscape and irrigation professionals help with business operations and technical know-how.

May 20, 2008, Phoenix, Ariz.—To give customers more resources in a sulking economy, Ewing Irrigation has appointed four sales people with 70 years of combined industry experience to assist with product selection, quoting, maintenance programs, installation and troubleshooting.

As a turf and agronomic sales representative, 22-year-veteran John Morgan will help Houston-area customers with troubleshooting turf problems and developing turf programs for successful grow-in and maintenance.

With 26 years of field experience, John Raines will serve residential and commercial professionals in Georgia with all-things landscape and irrigation. According to Raines, if a contractor has a problem out in the field, there is a good chance he has seen it before and knows the solution.

Kendall Chilek will serve as water management specialist for the San Antonio and Austin metropolitan areas, including College Station and the Rio Grande Valley. A trustee of the Texas Turf Irrigation Association, Chilek is well-versed in the latest irrigation technology on the market, and believes implementing proper water management products and practices can add credibility to any landscape business.

Damon Adams will offer his 20 years of industry experience to landscape companies and municipalities in the greater Seattle metropolitan area. With past service in both the distribution and contracting channels, Adams understands the level of service a distributor must bring in order to give the customer a positive buying experience.
